

Second only to the Hybrid Tea and Grandiflora in popularity, the Floribunda is characterized by its profuse ability to bear flowers in large clusters or trusses with more than one bloom in flower at any one time. This class is unrivaled for providing massive colorful, long-lasting garden displays. The distinct advantage of the Floribunda is its ability to bloom continually whereas the Hybrid Tea exhibits a bloom cycle every six to seven weeks. Floribundas as a class are hardier, easier to care for and more reliable in wet weather than their Hybrid Tea counterparts.

Hybrid Tea Roses

Perhaps the most popular class of modern roses is the Hybrid Tea, easily recognized by the large shapely blooms containing 30 to 50 petals. Flowers are borne on long stems either singly or with several side buds. In 1945, the 'Peace' rose heralded the modern era of the elegantly formed Hybrid Teas. So dramatic was the overwhelming public acceptance and praise accorded this variety that its place in history was instantaneous. Since 1945, many thousands of new hybrid teas have been bred and introduced.

Want to add color to a bare looking column or arbor? Climbing roses are the answer. A climbing rose produces very long canes. Sometimes a floribunda will produce a sport that becomes a climber, or a shrub rose can become a climbing rose because of its rangy growth habit. And then there are varieties that are bred to be climbers and that's all they will ever be. Unlike vines, roses have no way to attach their canes to a supporting structure. You will need to find a way to keep the canes supported by the structure you are using.

(Classic & Modern) Shrub roses are easily characterized by their sprawling habit. They can grow 5 to 15 feet or more in every direction given the correct climate and growing conditions. Noted for their hardiness, they are usually vigorous and produce large quantities of clusters of flowers.

Abraham Darby™

(Latin for "large-flowered") These roses are a cross between the Hybrid Tea and Floribunda roses. The flower size is midway between that of its parents. Flowers form on long stems and are borne either singly or in small clusters. The blooms are usually double and without a striking fragrance. Grandiflora shrubs are typically larger than either hybrid teas or floribundas.
